

The American Pain Society honors Massachusetts General Hospital as a Clinical Center of Excellence in Pain Management

On May 12, 2016 – The American Pain Society (APS), honored the Massachusetts General Hospital Division of Pain Medicine as a recipient of its annual Clinical Center of Excellence in Pain Management Award. It was just one of two multidisciplinary pain programs were recognized that year. APS established the Clinical Centers of Excellence in Pain Management program in 2006 to increase awareness about teams of health professionals who address critical, sometimes unmet, needs in pain management within their communities. A recurring quality of leading pain programs is success in helping patients enhance their overall function and quality of life by treating the whole person, not just the pain.
