

HOPE Clinic

The HOPE Clinic is a team of physicians, social workers, nurses, recovery coaches, and coordinators who provide high-quality, coordinated care for pregnant and parenting women and their families to maximize their ability to successfully navigate pregnancy, early parenting, and substance use recovery.

What the HOPE Clinic offers

- Our goal is to provide extra support for women and their families during this special time. We know that every woman's path is unique and we tailor our medical and social services to meet each individual where she is in her substance use and recovery.
- We welcome women, their partners and their infants at any time in their pregnancy or after delivery.
- Women and families are seen at our outpatient clinic at Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH) and Mass General Hospital for Children.
- We offer medication treatment for substance use disorders (eg: buprenorphine, naltrexone) and work with local methadone clinics.
- When a patient is admitted for labor at the MGH, we work with the inpatient team to support women through childbirth and their hospital stay at the MGH.
- After delivery, we welcome patients and their newborns back to our clinic to continue care for the next two years, after which time we will help link families to providers in their community.
